Customer Reviews

Just got the new book in the 'Build the Perfect Bug Out' series by Creek Stewart. As soon as I saw this on 's pre-order, I knew it was a must have. Even though I have stuff by Jeager, Nesmuk, Kochanski, and Canterbury as well as numerous tomes on country and pioneer living, this is one I had to have. Let's be honest; much in survival and preparation books is redundant, as you can talk about how to boil water only so many different ways, But Creek has proven time and time again that a flexible mind is the most important survival skill. In his new book Build the Perfect Bug Out Survival Skills, he blends urban and wilderness skills in such a clever and new way, it makes the book immediately valuable for the urban reader. For instance, he has a great idea for using a 55 gal drum as a fire reflector. Often times, you can find a drum torn up or in bad shape. Take that one and split down the side and stretched out a bit so it forms a wide letter 'C'. Then lay it on its side and build the fire right on the edge. Also, his idea for a rat snare using a twitch up and 4 inch pvc is absolutely the most shrewd trapping scheme I've seen in months. He also shows how to make an urban alarm on a door using a twitch up as well...brilliant! Look, you need this book. Even if you're not in the woods, even if you're not a 'prepper', even if you just sit around all day waiting for the government to protect your family and take care of your family because you won't do the job God gave YOU....you need this book. And why? Because, if for no other reason, you need to see really sagacious ideas contrived to solve problems you didn't even know you had and might actually one day have to implement. Well, his next book won't be in the 'Bug Out' series.
